A Cross Country Race

According to Billy (so there may be a hint of embellishment to this story), Zebedee had a fair bit of trouble parking his nifty red Audi TT in The Packhorse car park. First, he backed in to find that he had parallel-parked neatly – but that his tyres were actually parallel to the parking space delineating white line that ran under the centre of his car. He eventually gave up, turned around and slid the thing in forwards... still not quite in the middle of the white lines.

Motox strode through the car park with a largish plastic bike handle stuck to his forehead by elastic. Since this is the Hash and people can do whatever they want, few took notice of it. Until he wandered over to our group to tell us that he had decided to outdo HappyFeet with her, um, apparatus (you'll have to look in Gobsheet 2114 to find out). Problem was, of course, she hadn't turned up at this week's Hash so Motox was left wandering among us looking like a dickhead (so no change there, he snickered. Harsh, but almost fair).

Our Hare Dunny had been brave and tough to turn out tonight. She had had a minor operation a week or so ago which, I'm sure, would have made most people think twice. However, she was seen running a few times so we are glad to see you are ok, Dunny. Her co-Hare, Rampant, had obviously made the most of her partial invalidity. The Trail consisted of long straight bits interspersed with...even longer straight bits. This piece is appropriately entitled since it certainly felt more like a race than a Hash. But what an area to have a race/Hash in. We scuttled through darkling forests, rustled through sturdy green seas of wheat and barley and scampered along narrow earthen tracks. Oh, yes, and stumped along a fair length or two of leaden tarmac.

Our early Trail zipped through the forest by the side of the pub, where Shitfor (comically alluding to his Hash Crash a couple of weeks ago) called out to us to, "Mind the roots!" What a caring chap. And then we were on to the first set of lengthy, gasping, heart-pounding, eyeballs-out runs.

You know what? I've completely run out of time to write this. My apologies, but this week is more than a bit nuts. I'll just do the Down Downs and thank our valiant Hares for a good run through wonderful country.

On On. Hashgate.

Down Downs

RA Foghorn presided over this in the cool of the pub courtyard.

Who Got It

Why

|----------------|--|
| Dumber | Foghorn told us that he actually started Foghorn Hashing many years ago. Foghorn has done 800+ Runs. Dumber was presented with his 50 Runs award... 😊 |
| Jan Foghorn | Today's Virgin necked his ½ like there was no tomorrow. Presented by Mr Blobby to Foggy for running into a tree while looking at Dunny's bum while she was bending over to lay some flour! |
| Mr Blobby | While parking earlier, he almost offed Spot! |
| Mrs Blobby | Wearing new shoes. She got away with an orange juice... not out of her new shoe! |
| SlowSucker | Forgetting to bring the La Pecarina apron. He hadn't even told his lady, Swallow, that he had been awarded the apron. He looked sheepish about it. |
| Motox | Forgetting to ask Mr Blobby to bring a pair of shorts tonight. |
| Dunny, Rampant | A Baileys and a ½ for our Hares tonight. The Baileys won. |
